Question Two (20points)

Read the following article carefully, then in your ANSWER BOOKLET, answer all the questions that follow. Your answers should be based on the article.

Possibly, the first thing we can take from economics is the importance of doing a cost-benefit analysis when making big decisions. Comfortable though we may be with making a list of pros and cons, we should recognize that it is actually a rather ineffective tool. Just one of the cons might easily outweigh all of the pros. A cost-benefit analysis is something altogether more sophisticated, which allows you to be more objective. For example, let's say that you have to decide whether to make a journey by train or aeroplane. The financial cost of each journey is obvious, but there are also other costs to take into account, such as the cost in your time, the cost in terms of how tired you'll be on arrival, the environmental cost and so on. Give each of these a score out of five, and then weigh them up against the potential benefits, scored in the same way, and the choice becomes much easier.

There are also certain in-built human biases we ought to bear in mind, for example, something known as 'present bias'. Behavioral economics teaches us that people have a tendency to overvalue immediate rewards over long-term payoffs. A famous study showed that given the choice between receiving less money now, or more money later, most people would choose the former, even though they'd end up less well-off. This is also the reason why people procrastinate, or why you should never go food shopping when you're hungry. Once aware of this propensity however, you can make sure you avoid it. For example, if you put your money in a savings account where you can't get at it easily, you'll overcome the tendency to want to spend it straightaway, rather than wait.
