2. Grammar Explanation

A. Reporting Verbs and Their Patterns

Many reporting verbs can be followed by different grammatical patterns, and sometimes this causes a change in meaning or level of formality.

Common Patterns:

1. Verb + (that) + clause

- He confessed that he had broken the vase.

2. Verb + object + (that) + clause

- He informed me that all the shops were closed.

3. Verb + if / wh-word + clause

- They asked how often I exercised at home.

4. Verb + (that) + subject + (should) + infinitive (no to)

- They recommended that we (should) wear protective gloves.

5. Verb + (not) to + infinitive

- He promised to cook dinner.

6. Verb + object + (not) to + infinitive

- He encouraged me to buy his book.

7. Verb + (not) gerund (-ing)

- Kyle regretted criticising our latest idea.

8. Verb + (object) + preposition + gerund (-ing)

- He congratulated me on passing the test.

Watch Out (Register Change):

He suggested watching a film. (less formal)

He suggested (that) we (should) watch a film. (more formal)

B. Impersonal Reporting Structures

We use impersonal reporting to talk about what people generally believe, think, or say, especially when:

- the speaker is unknown
- the speaker is not important
- we want to sound formal or objective

Two Main Structures:

1. It + passive + that-clause

- It is believed that nature sounds help you relax.

2. Subject + passive + to-infinitive

- Nature sounds are supposed to help you sleep better.

Special Forms:

- Perfect infinitive (to have + past participle) → action happened earlier
 - The fire is thought to have been started deliberately.
- To be + -ing → ongoing situation
 - Young people are thought to be using social media more.

3. Examples from the Lesson

- The interviewer congratulated Callum on having won a prestigious book award.
- The writer regretted not doing it sooner.
- The interviewer asked if laughter was really good for us.
- It is now believed that specially trained clowns can help reduce hospital stays.
